

Keep net neutrality. Internet service qualifies as a utility. There are several issues not addressed by the current “repeal” effort:

1) Internet is necessary in today's world. Proof: Public schools assign my children homework and video tutorials from the Internet. One of the largest retailer in the world, Amazon, exists primarily online.

2) End users have little or no choice of ISP. Proof: Most Americans have 1 broadband provider available, especially those in rural areas. Even in cities, the vast majority of customers have at most 2 broadband providers. This is not enough choice to foster competition.

3) ISPs will choose what companies get service to end users. Proof: Verizon already charged Netflix for "better" access to end customers. This means customers do not get bandwidth they already paid for to services they have chosen to utilize.
